“ I remember Sunday dinners at Zia Anna's house. Food was always plenty and conversation were lively. While in the background Abbott and Costello were always in some sort of trouble. Some of my favorite memories were of visiting Zia Anna's house and listening. The conversation of growing up in an Italy I can only imagine. The stories were really interesting; some downright scary; but through it all they always spoke of love, loss and moving forward to their future, all the while remembering where they came from. I will miss Zia Anna so much; but I'm grateful for the time I had with her. The world has lost another of a generation full of resiliency, love and fortitude.
